Casement's landing in Banna was one of the few significant events of the Easter Rising to happen outside of the capital, and it had a national and international impact. The Rising was an attempt to establish a nation state for the whole country. The Museum will provide a space for people to reflect on how the events of the period were experienced beyond the capital. Casement's international contribution as a humanitarian is still relatively unfamiliar to many outside of the academic world. This is a global story that will resonate not only with Irish people but with all international visitors. |
